Examples of questions you might address in your journal and other reflection projects:

Before a project:
- What is Public Achievement?
- What issues are so important to you that you would be willing to act to make a change?
- What could people of your age do to impact the world in a positive way?
- What do you think might happen during this project?
- What are you looking forward to?
- What are you nervous about?
- What do you think you might learn from this project?

During and after project reflection:
- What is your interest in this issue?
- What has been the best part of the project? Why?
- What has been the hardest part of the project? Why?
- What have you learned that you didn’t know at the beginning of this project?
- What is the most valuable thing you learned during the project? Why was it valuable?
- If you could make changes in the lives of the people benefiting from your project, what would they be and why?
- How did you feel about your project?
- What are some concerns you have about what you experienced in this project?
- What information did you find most useful? Why?
- How is this project connected to your life?
- What have you learned from the people involved in this project? What have they learned from you?
- What have you learned about yourself and your community by doing this project?
- What is one thing you intend to do differently as a result of what you learned during your project?
- Are there ways that you could stay involved in this project in the future?
